

35. Bounce Rate

It is a number in percentage of visitors who leave a website after viewing just one page, without going further click on links connected to explore more.

Example: On a site that you visit, click on a link for free data analytics course the first page loads but it has other embedded links and irritating pop-up ads, immediately you click back too many times to get out of the page. The amount of people that click out of the page, their percentage is the bounce back rate.

Source : <https://agencyanalytics.com>

36. A/B Testing:

Monitored experiment comparing two versions of a digital asset to determine which performs better.

Example: Netflix uses this type of testing using artwork on the home screens. They show 50% of a dramatic of the main actor, then the other 50% an action scene. By clicking on the picture or scene you have responded to their test, that is how they determine which more shows to recommend for you by historical data that you clicked on.

Source: <https://www.geeksforgeeks.org>.

37. Lead generation

It is basically the process of finding people who are interested in what you sell and getting their information.

There is no cold calling as you focus on people who have raised their hands for quote, signed up and downloaded the guide.

Example: As a person looking to lose weight. I see an Instagram ad for a 7-day @ home challenge. I then click on the link and enter my details. After that I receive a free workout plan, with the subscriber success stories, at the end a 600 off ~~off~~ <sup>on</sup> an annual membership.

Source: <https://fastercapital.com>

38. Marketing Attribution

✓ The science of determining which channels in a customer's journey get the credit for a final sale. When a buyer interacts with multiple channels before purchase, attribution helps you figure out which marketing actually drove the revenue.

Example: Akhona always spends weeks before buying anything, this time it's the headphones she has been eyeing. Day 1, I see an ad on Instagram while scrolling. Click on it browses 2 minutes and leave. Day 5 I research further about different earphones. Day 10 I get a discounted code for durable Sony brand through an ad, click and add to cart but leave it. Day 12 I get an email regarding the forgotten cart, I then click and complete the ₹450 sale of headphones.

Source: <https://www.onlinemarketinggodeless.com>